UNC's vice chancellor for research cited for plagiarizing in federal grant application

TERRY MAGNUSON, UNC-Chapel Hill's vice chancellor for research, oversees the university's $1 billion research enterprise. His actions have come under scrutiny.

The Office of Research Integrity published Tuesday.

The university conducted an assessment with further analysis by the Office of Research Integrity, according to the report.

Magnuson could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

The Chronicle of Higher Education

FEBRUARY 24, 2022 2:55 PM

RELATED STORIES FROM RALEIGH NEWS & OBSERVER

This story was originally published

Keith said. “We will continue to follow the standards and processes set forth by the university, and we hold anyone involved in research activity at the University to that standard,” Beth Keith, associate vice chancellor for research integrity, said in a statement.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

NewUNC.edu features resources for people navigating the job market, including information on the UNC-Chapel Hill's vice chancellor for research.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

The university has not answered questions about when Chancellor Kevin Guskiewicz, former Provost Bob Blouin or other UNC administrators learned of the allegations.

Guskiewicz and Provost Chris Clemens “resolve this situation in the interests of the institution and out of respect to this faculty with all deliberate speed.”

Kate Murphy covers higher education for The News & Observer. Previously, she covered higher education for

As a faculty, we believe that this situation has the potential to taint our own

UNC FACULTY CONCERNED

Keith said. “We will continue to follow the standards and processes set forth by the university, and we hold anyone involved in research activity at the University to that standard,” Beth Keith, associate vice chancellor for research integrity, said in a statement.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

NewUNC.edu features resources for people navigating the job market, including information on the UNC-Chapel Hill's vice chancellor for research.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

The university has not answered questions about when Chancellor Kevin Guskiewicz, former Provost Bob Blouin or other UNC administrators learned of the allegations.

Guskiewicz and Provost Chris Clemens “resolve this situation in the interests of the institution and out of respect to this faculty with all deliberate speed.”

Kate Murphy covers higher education for The News & Observer. Previously, she covered higher education for

As a faculty, we believe that this situation has the potential to taint our own

UNC FACULTY CONCERNED

Keith said. “We will continue to follow the standards and processes set forth by the university, and we hold anyone involved in research activity at the University to that standard,” Beth Keith, associate vice chancellor for research integrity, said in a statement.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

NewUNC.edu features resources for people navigating the job market, including information on the UNC-Chapel Hill's vice chancellor for research.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

The university has not answered questions about when Chancellor Kevin Guskiewicz, former Provost Bob Blouin or other UNC administrators learned of the allegations.

Guskiewicz and Provost Chris Clemens “resolve this situation in the interests of the institution and out of respect to this faculty with all deliberate speed.”

Kate Murphy covers higher education for The News & Observer. Previously, she covered higher education for

As a faculty, we believe that this situation has the potential to taint our own

UNC FACULTY CONCERNED

Keith said. “We will continue to follow the standards and processes set forth by the university, and we hold anyone involved in research activity at the University to that standard,” Beth Keith, associate vice chancellor for research integrity, said in a statement.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

NewUNC.edu features resources for people navigating the job market, including information on the UNC-Chapel Hill's vice chancellor for research.

“Terry is a top-notch scientist who possesses strength, compassion and goodness that permeates the research ecosystem at Carolina. Notably, under Terry’s leadership, the Office of Research Integrity developed the current research integrity oversight system at Carolina.”

The university has not answered questions about when Chancellor Kevin Guskiewicz, former Provost Bob Blouin or other UNC administrators learned of the allegations.

Guskiewicz and Provost Chris Clemens “resolve this situation in the interests of the institution and out of respect to this faculty with all deliberate speed.”

Kate Murphy covers higher education for The News & Observer. Previously, she covered higher education for